For too long, women, queer, trans, non-binary, disabled, fat, and otherwise marginalized bodies have been treated by medicine as problems to be solved—diagnosed, corrected, and controlled. Gender has often been the silent axis of pathologization, shaping whose pain is believed, whose bodies are regulated, and whose autonomy is denied.

This year's conference calls us to move beyond the clinic's narrow gaze and into the expansive care of community. We'll explore how gendered and intersectional forms of medical control have defined health across history, and how resistance—feminist, queer, trans, and collective—has always been a source of survival, healing, and transformation.

Together, we'll reclaim health rooted in lived experience, bodily autonomy, interdependence, and justice.
